Children's Terrors.

How Unnecessary Fears are Bred in Infants.

It must be remembered that explicit utterance is not essential for the conveyance of ideas; for in the child a vague general notion is quite as effective for producing emotion as is a clear cut one. Now the explanation of this is very simple, and depends upon one fact that gesture proceeds speech as a vehicle of thought. The infant comprehends the varying attitudes and vocal tones of its mother long before it can distinguish different words.

If I say to a small boy that a bear will eat him up, the effect upon his emotions entirely differs whether I make the remark with portentous gravity and horror, or whether I say it with bubbling joviality, as evidently a huge joke.

In the first case the impression will rush to my side in terror and try to be saved from the bear, and a phobia is in course of construction; with the latter procedure the boy will laugh consumedly, and it would not take much to make him enter the cage and strike the bear. But even when terrified, a child feels a refuge in the protection of his elders during the day when they are rarely absent.

At night, however, the child is alone and his little consciousness cannot find the easy support of others. Before the kaleidoscope of his dreams pass the various images and accompanying emotions of his waking life, so that if any of these images have become linked with fear it is certain to bring with it terror as it surges into a dream. In the night, and the child jumps up awakened in panic, finding no one near upon whom to lean.

It should not be difficult to see that these night terrors are the product of a suggestion while awake, and are not hereditary psychopathy could be invoked to explain her dread, for none of her three daughters had the least fear of the dark, and indeed they used to be sent by their school fellows into dark and eerie places without experiencing the least trepidation. The difference was that as children they were protected by their mother from the tales of the plantation negroes, who knew that dismissal would follow transgression of the prohibition.

The formation of a night terror was tipped in the bud in the case of my own boy, then aged three and three-quarters. I shall try to explain the method. For several weeks he had been visiting the zoological garden every afternoon in the company of a French maid, an exceptionally forceful character and apparently free from the superstitiousness of the average nurse.

For a long time all went well until one evening the boy began to cry in bed soon after he was left for the night. At this unusual occurrence I went to the stairs and inquired the cause of the boy's trouble. He said there were lions in the house and that he did not want to stay alone, as he was afraid they would eat him. The source of the idea had been that the lions had roared in the house than usual on that particular afternoon, and that he had been much impressed, standing for some time quite motionless before the cage, though unterrified.

I soon convinced the boy that the lions had to remain in their cages, and could not get out, hence there were none in the house, so that there was no occasion for fear. Of course it was first necessary to give him the feeling of security gained by embracing me, and secondly to begin the conversation by talking of something else, I have forgotten what.

In this way the state of terror was dismissed and the feeling of protection was induced before we returned to the subject of the lions, and he was rather a joke of the funny roaring of the lions before we had finished, and he finally lay down with solemn purpose to go to sleep and think, as I suggested of the tram-cars and motors passing outside his open window.

It was all a very simple substitution, but it was the prevention of what might have become a serious fear psychosis if injudiciously handled. [Medical Record.]

A Bad Weed.

We are sorry to notice the wild carrot is getting a start in Maine, first along the roadsides. Coming from Connecticut, which in some sections is fairly over run with the weed, it is noticeable that Maine, at least the portion which we have been able to see in a few weeks, has comparatively little of the weed, but yet that little is too much. The wild carrot is one of the worst of weeds. Where it gets a foothold it persists and insists upon occupying the soil to the exclusion of almost every other kind of vegetation.

Along the roadside where the wild carrot gets a start it will hog the entire scenery unless held in check. It is particularly apt to grow and flourish in uncultivated lots in cities and villages.

It has a more or less attractive appearance as a blossoming plant, but it is the root in the earth which does the damage, and it is almost impossible for the man who realizes the character of the weed to see beauty in its flower. It is not particularly difficult of eradication if one is as persistent as the weed.

Laws against allowing weeds to grow will not enforce themselves. Everybody must help.

The Bell Skirt.

There is talk of the return of the bell skirt. It is a graceful model, smooth and clinging about the hips and flaring round the feet, and then again, the fuller skirt will probably bring a return of the train, which has been an impossibility since all the skirts have been so narrow.

Women's Hair.

Can Easily be Made Fascinating and Luxuriant.
On April 2, 1910, Mrs. R. M. Worden, 5 St. James Ave., Holyoke, Mass., wrote: "Parisian Sage is the best hair dressing I ever used. It gave my hair life and a gloss which no other dressing ever did, besides stopping it from falling out. It is the only dressing for up-to-date women."

Parisian Sage is guaranteed by Frank Kimball, proprietor of The Noyes Drug Store, to cure dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or more. It makes hair grow, lustrous and luxuriant. It is a delightfully refreshing hair dressing, not sticky or greasy and will immediately banish all odors. Large bottle 50 cents at drug-gists everywhere, and at Noyes Drug Store. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package. 35-35

'Mid Fashions' Realm.

A New Shape in Hats.

The expected turn of the wheel of fashion has brought into the millinery field a different shape of hat. From the upturned brim there is a departure for summer wear in the form of large flat hats, with slightly drooping brims and low crowns.

Some of the brims are slightly narrower at the front, while a decided element of comfort is evident in the deep bandeaux, that resemble a skullcap, at the back of the hat, vanishing at the front into a thin rim of buckram. These are so fitted that no hatpins are necessary.

A wreath of flowers, nowhere rising above the crown is the simple trimming used on the majority of the flat shapes. There can be the introduction of a velvet flower, if a note of contrast be needed.

Some of the new modes are of fine straw, leghorn or of frames covered with satin and veiled with chiffon, says Boston Post.

As a change from the towering turbans the shapes that eclipse the features, the low flat hats resting on the softness of naturally arranged hair, come as a welcome relief.

Some of the New Fabrics.

Foulards lead the line of silks. They are excellent as foundations for the lace and chiffon veiling in tunics and dolmans.

Satin crepes and liberty silks and light-weight satins are the coming materials for evening wear. They are used for foundations under chiffon or silk net, or are themselves made up in black and white and pastel shades.

Persian silks and gauze, and plain tafetas are most popular for separate blouses for dresswear for the broadcloth or dark silk suits, says Buffalo Commercial.

Worsted, silk and wool materials, and fine broadcloths are coming in for early fall wear. Plain, rough weaves are also in favor, with much veiling in scroll effects for trimming and combination with other materials.

Panama cloths are largely taking the place of light-weight broadcloths, and silk-warp poplins and crepes are also to be seen for tailormade suitings.

Worsted and silk and woolen voiles are in high favor as well as the new French toile cloth and hopsacking.

Jacquard, the latest in dress materials, is seen principally in black, though it probably will appear in colors later on.

Velvets and viyettes will be among the most fashionable of the fall fabrics for suits, and challis will be stylish for house dresses.

French flannels and plain, plaid and changeable tafetas are also modish. Corduroy and crepe de chine is one combination that is really attractive, strange as it sounds.

Selecting Corn Seed.

"The corn should be allowed to mature well on the stalk. By selecting the earliest maturing ears and picking them from the stalk as soon as the husks begin to turn yellow, which is a common practice, earliness is secured at the expense of vitality."

"A slight frost will not injure corn if it is well matured and it is better to run the risk of a frost than to pick the ears too early. The later part of the growing season seems to improve the vitality of the corn greatly."

"Care should be taken in picking seed to secure ears which are attached to the stalk about three feet above the ground. These ears will grow either very high or very low upon the stalk should be rejected as they are undesirable, having characteristics which we do not desire."

For the same reason we should avoid selecting ears with very short or very long shanks or from defective stalks."

"Only those ears should be retained for curing for seed that are of good form. Seed corn should be put into the proper place for curing the same day that it is taken from the field."

Mileage of Blood Circulation.

The mileage of the blood circulation reveals some astonishing facts. It has just been calculated for instance that assuming the heart to beat sixty-nine times a minute at ordinary pressure the blood goes at the rate of 200 yards in a minute, or nine miles a year.

If a man 84 years old could have but one single blood corpuscle floating in his blood all his life it would have traveled in that time nearly 7,000,000 miles.

Charles C. Hamlin.

Charles C. Hamlin, one of the best known residents of the northern part of the town, died at his home at North Hebron as the direct result of a shock.

Mr. Hamlin was a native of Waterford, the son of William and Louisa Billings Hamlin, both natives of Waterford. Mr. Hamlin has been prominent in the town affairs for many years and was a man whose judgment was much respected by his neighbors and townsmen.

The funeral services are to be held at North Bridgton, Friday, August 26th, at 1.30 p. m. and the interment was at South Waterford.

Dr. Robert J. Aley of Indianapolis, state superintendent of public instructions and candidate for re-election, has decided to accept the presidency of the University of Maine, offered him last week. The Democratic state committee will fill the vacancy caused by Dr. Aley's withdrawal.

Henry W. Smith, the well-known musician and writer of hymns and music, has consented to write his "Reminiscences of Forty Years Ago" of Oxford County. An article will be printed in next week's ADVERTISER.

Another trouble-saver of the Crawford is the patented Single Damper. One motion—slide the knob to "kindle," "bake" or "check"—the range does the rest. No damper mistakes.

Novel System of Taxation.

Edmonton, Canada, is trying out a new system of taxation. In essentials it is a single tax system, since it levies on the actual cash value of land and does not tax improvements at all, directly. There are three other regular schedules, however, covering business, income and special franchises, so Edmonton's is not strictly a single tax system, though there is a good deal of the spirit of the single tax idea in it.

The fact is that the man who drew up the plan, William Scott, king's councillor, didn't know who Henry George was and had never heard the term "single tax" when he framed his taxation scheme.

In brief, this is the scheme: Levies are made on the actual cash values of land. In estimating the value of vacant lots the value of nearby improved property is taken into consideration. Thus a vacant lot is listed at its value as a site for a building like the average building of the neighborhood—not as a prospective site, but as an actual site.

The tax on business is reckoned by the square foot of floor space, and the rate for each different business is determined by a table, corrected every year. Thus a florist is taxed the minimum, 25 cents per square foot, while a banker is taxed the maximum, $7.50 per square foot.

Fifty different businesses are classified and there is a fifty-first class to serve as a catch-all for odd vocations.

No attention is paid to the non-essentials, to the character of the buildings or furnishings. A bank built of Carrara marble is taxed at the same rate per square foot as is the bank built of boards.

Here are a few sample assessments per square foot for 1909: Millinery stores, $2; undertakers' parlors, $2.50; ice cream parlor, $2; boarding houses, 50 cents; drug stores, $4; printing offices, $2.50; lawyers' offices, $4.

The income tax is levied at a fixed rate on each thousand dollars over the first thousand, which is exempt from taxation. During 1908 the rate was $1.45 per $100.

The tax on special franchises doesn't worry the Edmontonites, since the city owns all the special franchises at present, and all are exempt from taxation.

The system works. During the year 1908 there were less than half a dozen appeals for the council, as provided for in cases of alleged unfair valuation, and only one second appeal to the courts.

The most notable effect of the system is that it has on the improvement of property. Since the system puts a premium on improvement and a penalty on non-improvement, vacant lots in the downtown section of Edmonton are rare. The town is growing rapidly, but not raggedly. There is no inducement to buy land to hold for a rise, so Edmonton is being built up compactly.

ROLSTER'S MILLS.

Regret to Lose Pastor.

Rev. J. R. Bruce gave his farewell sermon here, last Sabbath, to a large audience. The people regret greatly to part with Mr. and Mrs. Bruce, who have endeavored themselves to all. Seldom is a country church permitted to possess a pastor of his equal. It is a matter of congratulation that the committee appointed has raised his salary and still have a sum in the treasury, demonstrating the fact that it is easy to raise the salary of a pastor who is liked by the people. Our loss is Norway's gain.
